PROJECT? I KNOW IT! I CAN!

PROJECT MANAGEMENT AS AN ART OF LEADERSHIP

Project management is an art of leadership! Project managers must bring together the most diverse interests of all stakeholders in projects and at the same time lead their projects to success without exceeding budgets and deadlines. At the same time, they have little or no disciplinary responsibility. Their ART therefore consists of convincing all stakeholders, taking them with them and leading projects to success together.

The aim is to work out and make available the necessary competencies for management tasks in project management and successful and stress-free project handling.

With case studies from daily practice, the necessary leadership competence for the application in the project life cycle is directly experienced. Participants can learn from their own examples from their daily work how to present themselves more competently and clearly in the future in order to involve all stakeholders and successfully complete projects. The necessity and practice of leadership are taught. The results can be applied directly in everyday professional life.

The content of the experience learned and applied is: Development and implementation of goals in group processes, strategy in the project, support and interaction. Self-organisation in a team and mutual support. Autonomy and self-transcendence. Functional boundaries and overlaps. The own point of view - the point of view of others. Sensible use of resources (one's own and that of others). Continuous improvement of the process.

Dates by individual arrangement.
